Roger Gault has developed a wide variety of projects including office, retail, industrial, hotel, multifamily and single-family residential and land development. He handles land acquisition, partnership structure, debt and equity structure, leasing and marketing. Furthermore, Roger coordinates zoning and entitlement approvals, administers the design and construction management process, and negotiates project acquisition and dispositions.

In addition to developing projects for his own account, Roger also provides real estate consulting and advisement services. These services include project planning, budgeting, marketing, and project management for third-party owners of development and investment properties.

Prior to founding Gault Company, Roger served as an officer for a variety of companies while developing his own projects. This gave him the expertise that has allowed him to pursue the diversity of projects that are in his portfolio today. Roger began his real estate career at Hines Industrial, a division of Hines, where he developed Class A suburban office buildings and industrial properties.

Following Hines Industrial, his career took him to National Retail Properties, a division of Southland Financial Corporation where he served as Vice President of Development, heading up development activities primarily based in the master planned community of Las Colinas in Irving, Texas. He was then recruited to move to Honolulu, Hawaii as Executive Vice President of Nansay Hawaii, to run the Hawaii office for the Japanese development company. While at Nansay, Roger oversaw the acquisition of over $100 million of land and investment properties in Hawaii, and executed the redevelopment of office, hotel and resort properties.

Roger eventually returned to Dallas, Texas to pursue development of several single-family lot communities in the North Texas area that he had begun while living in Hawaii. He concurrently accepted a position at Cityplace Company, developing retail, multifamily and special-use projects in the urban mixed-use community. Also while at Cityplace, he handled land and project sales, zoning and entitlements, TIF and PID administration matters, and municipal infrastructure construction.

His last corporate endeavor prior to forming Gault Company was as a partner of Koll Development Company (KDC), where he was involved in the development of corporate headquarters for Fortune 500 companies. He was responsible for the development of corporate campuses for companies such as Omnicom, Rapp Collins Worldwide, Citizens Communications and Nokia.
